What does a front end developer do?

To begin with, a Front-end developer creates designs, websites and applications, using HTML, CSS and Javascript.

With this in mind, they determine where to place the elements of the website so its easy to navigate for the user.

As a result of, front-end developers earn 88000$/y.

Moreover, the demand for this job is growing.

Having said that, the job can be flexible, you can work on your own, for a company or for a non profit organization.

Because you work on the computer, you can work across the country or the globe.

Also this career increase your creativity and problem solving skills.

Furthermore, the skills you want to have as a front-end developer are the 3 languages (html, css and javascript), understanding the frameworks for the languages and understanding how to use different software.

All thing considered, if you want to learn front-end developpement, you can take online courses such as introduction to web developpement and responsive web developpement.